The persecution to which the Christians is China were subjected during the Franco Chinese hostilities has led to the publication of a pamphlet on the subject by the Shanghai and Hankow Committees of the Evangelical Alliance. The province of Kwangtung attained an unenviable pre-eminence for the animosity displayed against the missions by the populace and for the general apathy of the officials. In Fubkien, which was the theatre of one of the most sanguinary episodes of the war, there was much less hostility shown to the Christians, and no case of personal assault upon any consider it to be due to the efforts of the Fuhkien officials to repress outbreaks. On the other hand, they express their belief that the main cause of religious persecutions | Grand Processional March "Silver Trampets" Viviani in Kwangtung is traceable to the attitude or the action of the officials, the lower mandarins in that province having faithfully followed the example of their superiors. By this our missionary authors evidently mean a plainer definition of Treaty which has been totally lost on the Fiery Cross stipulations and a more faithful observance theroof. At least that appears to be what is intended by the following passage:-"Let the status of the foreign missionary and that of the native convert be clearly defined and widely made known by the Central Government, and let the great Provincial Authorities be made to understand that such status must be honestly respected by the local Magistrates, and let this be done such as are now complained of would ther suggested that this should be done by a proclamation, distributed throughgood in come cases for a time, but we fear it would not have an abiding effect, unless no damage is estimated." the strictest injunctions were hid upon all was assented to by the Chinese Government, Chinese Government have freely admit- in the ten market during the next few days have also been erected on the higher levels. EXTRACT. ACLAE.

Being in dreamland of a morning early, Blithely I wendered, singing by the sea; Who should come meet ma, o'er the margin pearly

She, my life's idel, Aglae! She, my heart's idol, soulful-eyed and tender, Dwelling afar, from mortal sorrows free, What gracious goddess o'or my path did send hor,

Sister of fair Euphrosyno? Loved as a legend old in 'broidered story, A living beam of timeless fantasy, But Sleep has keys, may ope the gutes of glory,

So eilent, sweet is She! And dreams (but oh! the roses in her kirtle, How passing fair !) may wait us on like doves O'er life and time; upon her breast was myrtle And in her eyes were Loves!

How long we spake, or when her voice, beguiling, Consed, with the dying lyre's dear minstroley, Twere nought to tell; I woke. Nature was smiling On wood and vale. Sing, Robin, cherrily! GILBERT P. KNAPP.

OLIVER CROMWELL AND THE JEWS.

heads of their race. For this eruelty and the present century, made ample reparation. As is well known, the Jews, upon the application of one Manasseh Ben Israel, were permitted to re-enter our realm by Oliver Cromwell, who, in his statecraft and warlike ing of the Old Testament. "When the Jews records Spence in his "Anecdotes," "they offered him when Protector £60,000. Cromwell appointed a day for giving them an answer. He then sent for some of the most powerful among the clergy and some of the chief merchants of the city to be present at their meeting; it was in the long gallery at Whitehall. Sir Paul Rycult, who was then a young man, pressed in among the crowd. and said he never heard a man speak so well in his life as Cromwell did on the occasion. When they were all met he ordered the Jews to speak for themselves. After that he turned to the clergy, who inveighed much against the Jews, as a cruel and accursed people. Cromwell, in his answer-to-the clergy, called them the "Men of God," and desired to be informed by them whether it was not their opinion that the Jews were to be called, in the fulness of time into the Church. He then desired to know whether it was not every Christian man's duty to forward that good end all he could. Then he flourished a good deal on religion prevailing in this nation, the only place in the world where religion was taught in its full purity, Was it not, he said, then our duty in particular, to encourage them to settle where they could be taught the truth, and not to exclude them from the light and leave them among false teachers, papiets, and idolaters? This silenced the clergy. He then turned to the merchants, who spoke of their falseness and meanness, and that they would get their trade from them. "And can you really be afired," said he, "that this mean and despised people should be able to prevail in trade and credit over the merchants of England. the publist and most esteemed merchants of the whole world?" Thus he went on till he had silenced them, and so was at liberty to grant what he desired to the Jews .- "Studies
